

When multiple instances of kirk are run, spock is able to handle both instances as long as they take turns inputting messages. If both instances of kirk are executed at the exact same time then there may be overwritten data in the message buffer. However they could also just execute one after another since they are put into a message QUEUE implying it forms a line in a first in first out sequence.